<input type="checkbox"/>	Deserts are well known for being hot and dry. But in the winter time and at night, deserts get cold. Deserts have a very small amount of water in the ground. As temperatures drop, the desert floor gets cold. Since there's not much plant or animal life, strong winds blow across the desert floor. These conditions can lead to thin sheets of ice forming on a hard desert floor.
<input type="checkbox"/>	Are there any interesting things that happen where you live when the weather changes?
<input type="checkbox"/>	This happens in the Death Valley Desert National Park in California, USA. Ice forming in the desert is surprising, but it's not amazing. However, 180 kg rocks moving across the desert floor is amazing.
<input type="checkbox"/>	People didn't know how the rocks moved until very recently. A scientist named Richard Norris, from the University of California San Diego, discovered how the rocks moved. Strong winds blow the rocks along sheets of ice and scrape the desert floor. They leave a trail behind that are often up to 100 m long.
<input type="checkbox"/>	There are four seasons. When the seasons change, the earth's surface changes, too. Some of these changes are easy to see and understand. For example, in winter it gets cold, and snow falls. But depending on the environment, other changes are not so easy to understand.

Graphs give us mathematical data and information. When we look at them in a graphic form, we can use the information to make decisions. So, what do graphs help us see that simple numbers don't?

1. Graphs can be useful to learn about the history of something.

→ _____

If something is getting bigger or smaller, we can see that on a graph. We can look at how it used to be.

2. But we can also guess what will happen next by looking at what has already happened.

→ _____

3. For example, if a line graph shows something getting bigger, we can expect that it will continue to grow.

→ _____

If a line graph shows the sales of one thing increasing and the sales of another thing decreasing, we can expect that the one will become more popular.

4. If a line graph shows sales for something getting smaller and smaller, we can expect that it will become less popular in the future.

→ _____

Using the information on a graph can help people make decisions about the future. For example, people can use graphs to make decisions about saving money.

5. Students can track test scores to decide how much they need to study.

→ _____

Another example is exercise. People can track their weight to decide how much food and exercise they should get.

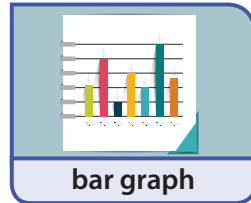

Graphs can be very useful. Can you think of any ways to use graphs in your daily life?

1. The information collected in surveys and shown on graphs is called data.

→ _____

Survey results are often displayed in a bar graph or pie chart.

2. Companies can use this kind of information to learn how to make more money.

→ _____

For example, popular books are often made into popular movies. These movies help the companies to make more money. How do you think companies decide which books should be made into movies?

3. Companies look at graphs to see which books are selling well.

→ _____

If a book is selling well, it could become a good movie. An example is the Harry Potter series.

4. These fictional fantasy books sold well and are still very popular.

→ _____

Later, they became successful movies.

Of course, this isn't always true. Sometimes people love the book, but the movie is not popular.

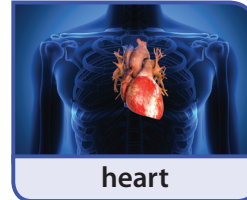

5. But usually successful books do become successful movies.

→ _____

This is why studios look for popular books. Movies are expensive to make. Movie studios want to be sure that they will make a popular movie. Then, they won't lose money.
