

Welcome to Seed Learning's *Star Speakers for Readers' Theater!

What Is Readers' Theater?

Readers' theater is a fun and interactive way for learners for practice speaking and conversation. It can be used in the classroom with the following functions:

- find a purpose for reading
- build fluency skills
- increase reading speed
- learn how to use body language, gestures, and facial expressions
- experiment with the sounds of language
- develop confidence in speaking in front of others

Purpose

Readers' theater gives students a real reason to read. It takes the text off the page and brings it to life. Students have the goal of giving a great performance. This sense of purpose makes reading for readers' theater a meaningful experience.

Fluency, Reading Speed

Repeated reading is an effective way of increasing fluency. However, re-reading the same text over and over can get a little dull. Readers' theater is one way to make re-reading more exciting. When a learner is re-reading a role to prepare for a performance, they feel more motivated to read. It is easier for the learner to engage with the material.

Body Language, Gestures, and Facial Expressions

When learners are able to move while speaking, use appropriate gestures, and show the emotions of the play's characters, their speaking will sound all the more natural. Language consists of the verbal (words) content and non-verbal (visual) content. Typically, language classes focus on the verbal aspects of language, but they neglect things like showing emotion and making gestures. Readers' theater provides an opportunity to include this component of language learning.

Experiment with the Sounds of Language

Often, our students feel self-conscious and afraid to speak out in English. Through readers' theater, learners have the opportunity to pretend to be someone else. We can encourage them to try out new voices. If they are a big giant, they can speak in a loud booming voice! If they are a little mouse, then can speak in a little tiny voice. In this way, they get to experiment and play with language in a fun atmosphere.

Develop Confidence in Speaking in Front of Others

All of the skills mentioned above are key in developing confidence. Students read from the script, so the stress of forgetting what to say is simply not a part of readers' theater. Once the fear of forgetting is removed, students can relax and enjoy their role. Learners will repeat the text, practice choosing a voice, create gestures and movements, and show expressions. After all this practice, they will be ready for a performance. The satisfied feeling of completing a readers' theater performance is a great way to build confidence.

What Readers' Theater is NOT

Readers' theater is not a grand stage performance. Students do not need costumes and sets. You do not need a stage for readers' theater. You do not even need an audience. In other words, readers' theater is easy to incorporate into the classroom because it does not need equipment and a stage. You can set up a performance in any classroom space. Of course, if you have the facilities and time, you can do a costumed stage performance, but this is NOT necessary for a successful readers' theater.

Book 1: How to Tell a True Princess

Script Summary

Prince George wants to find a true princess. But it is not easy. He gives up and goes home. To his surprise, a woman arrives at his home one rainy night. She says she is a princess. The prince's mom does not believe that this is a princess, so she gives her a test. The woman really is a true princess. Prince George marries the woman.

Objectives

- Read lines with fluency and accuracy
- Use appropriate body language and gestures
- Follow lines well and read their part at the correct time
- Stay in character
- Act out feelings of pain
- Pretend to carry objects

Key Vocabulary

prince, princess, marry, true, think, thief, steal, kind, wet, weather, dress, starving, mattress, pea, blanket, feel, move, stay, sorry, become, husband, wife, museum, visit

Key Expressions

Unit 1	Unit 2	Unit 3

Characters (Roles)

Narrator 1, Narrator 2, Horse, Clara, Prince, Mia, King, Queen, Cook

Tips for Assigning Roles

- Decide how to assign roles. Will you let students choose the roles they want? Or will you choose the roles for your students?
- Some characters have more dialog than others. Consider the ability of your students. It's a good idea to give the bigger roles to students who are more confident or better at reading.
- In a large class, divide your students into groups. Each member in the group gets a role. And each group performs the playlet. In a small class, give multiple roles to students.

Songs

This book has 4 songs:

- Unit 1: Where Is My Princess?
- Unit 2: The Princess
- Unit 3: A Real Princess
- Story Song: A True Princess

Preparing to Perform

Ask your students about TV shows and movies that they like. Ask them what the actors do to make the characters seem real. After this, talk about the importance of moving your body, using your voice, and showing feelings when you are acting.

Move Your Body

This playlet provides the opportunity for lots of miming and physical acting. Have the students practice carrying different kinds of objects. Shout out the name of an object and have the students pretend to act out carrying it.

Ex. Teacher: OK. Telephone!

Students: (act out holding a telephone)

Teacher: Next object. Bowl of hot soup!

Students: (act out carrying a bowl of hot soup)
